Spike Out Tournament

The Spike Out Volleyball Tournament originated at the Indiana School for the Deaf (ISD) in 1999 under Brian Bippus, the Athletic Director and volleyball coach. Bippus envisioned a national deaf volleyball tournament bringing together outstanding teams and athletes.

In spring 1999, Bippus had a conversation with Lynn Ray Boren, the volleyball coach for the Model Secondary School for the Deaf. Boren also had a passion for advancing volleyball in deaf youth. The conversation led to an idea to bring top teams to one site and let them "spike each other out" to claim the national championship. In October 1999, the idea turned into reality when ISD hosted the first ever Spike Out.

Initially, the term "Spike Out" was supposed to be a temporary name for the tournament to see how the Deaf community responded to it. The term was an immediate hit. Being easy to sign, "Spike Out" became synonymous with the most prestigious Deaf high school volleyball tournament in the country.

The inaugural tournament welcomed eight participating schools. Texas School for the Deaf defeated Model Secondary School for the Deaf in the first ever championship match.

Sorenson for Zoom

Whether you use VRS all the time or rarely, there are occasions that you need to make a call and want to see who you're contacting and the interpreter at the same time:

- ✓ Impromptu follow-ups with recruiters or hiring managers
- ✓ Talking with family members who aren't fluent in ASL
- ✓ Checking in with the babysitter to see how the kids are doing
- ✓ Touching base with teachers for urgent issues or questions
- ✓ Brainstorming sessions with colleagues or classmates
- ✓ Calls with your doctor

Sorenson for Zoom allows a richer experience of face-to-face VRS conversations, putting control and convenience in your hands: you easily add the app and integrate interpreting for everyone on the call for seamless connection.

You see the meeting and the interpreter on the same screen; no need to look back and forth from a videophone

Participants and interpreters can view shared content and still see each other

Interpreters can see everyone in the meeting to convey unspoken cues and easily identify speakers in group calls

Hearing participants can see the interpreter and allow time for message relay

Sorenson for Zoom lets you invite an interpreter into virtual meetings on platforms most of us already have on our devices. Simply add the app and request the interpreter within your scheduled meeting with a few clicks. And unlike most virtual meetings, the interpreter joins as an attendee, improving the experience for everyone.
